HEY were seated at the table in a restaurant—a 7-yearl old boy, his dad and sister. They were residents of Elmore County, Alabama.

At a nearby table there was a discussion of Alabama schools, the school term and school finance. The children could not help overhearing the conversation.

Said the daughter, "Dad, why is it that Elmore County pays its teachers more and runs its schools longer than any other county in Alabama?"

Her 7-year-old brother quickly replied: "Because of taxes paid by Alabama Power Company."

The schools in YOUR county operate for longer terms and pay their teachers more than they could if through the establishment of governmental power enterprises, the state, counties and municipalities were deprived of taxes now paid by Alabama Power Company, and other private utility companies.
